

KALESY WAS THE FIRST BALTIC COMPANY THAT STARTED TO PRODUCE WINDOWS, BALCONY AND ENTRANCE DOORS OF OKOUME WOOD

Kalesy is the first window factory in the Baltic region that started to produce windows, balcony doors and external doors using the tropical Okoume wood, which, having only 5-15% higher price, gives several important advantages to the end products.

The use of pinkish red Okoume wood that is becoming increasingly popular in the production of windows and doors in the whole world gives a good opportunity for home owners, companies, interior decorators and designers to accomplish a very exclusive result with reasonable prices in the interior, especially when natural water based scumble is used.

As Okoume wood is hardwood, the end products have no resin pockets which, due to hot southern and western sun exposure (especially if dark colours are used), often reveal themselves under the coat of paint, thus spoiling the look of the whole window or door. Also, the coat of paint adheres much more easily to Okoume wood than pinewood, increasing the resistance of windows and doors against weather conditions and ensuring their beautiful look during long years. The use of Okoume wood definitely contributes to accomplishing a faultless final result as there are no finger joints. However, in the case of standard pine-wood, the joints can not be eliminated.

The tropical Okoume wood is significantly cheaper than Meranti wood, which is, from all the exported types, maybe most familiar to local window producers. Due to its even colour, Okoume precludes any chance that naturally finished doors and windows located side by side could have different colours, which, on the other hand, is quite common with the use of Meranti. The more uniform density of Okoume (Okoume 450-550 kg/m³ vs. Meranti 380-780 kg/m³) enables to guarantee higher quality in all of its parts.

Company uses the quieter period after the construction boom to actively develop the window, balcony and entrance door solutions with higher thermal and noise resistance and implement new materials in the production. The use of Okoume wood that has grown in the mountains of Africa is an important step for us, which enables us to continuously offer our clients window and door products with modern solutions.

Kalesy has 12 years of experience in the production of wooden products, including wooden windows and doors. The company offers up to 5 years of guarantee on the windows and balcony doors.
